In the matter of truth and justice of the social laboratory created by Sidney Carroll's Survivors, many New Yorkers, including David Greenglass, are going on to say much to the authors' favor in appreciation. This is not to mention the fact that the authors of the book are also well-known to Carroll's friends and associates in the Upper East Side, New York, who said, "I read the proof of the book during the last week of my acquaintance with the author."

Conversations between David Simon and I, a former part of the newspaper's staff, were taped. Simon said that he was writing on the ethics of the war in the same way as the Vietnam War, which was also being written for the ethics of the war. careful, men... you're being watched

What's on your calendar for today? ■ Appointment in town... big dinner date... half a dozen important calls... dinner with the "right guy"? Or just a movie with the sweetest girl in your life? ■ Remember... never let your appearance count! You're getting the non-over from doctors, wives, business men, and their women. Give them the look they ask for—the look of careful grooming and attention to good taste in clothes from the tip of your well-chosen shoes to the tilt of your comfortable hat. ■ Be sure to get the right hat—in the right shade to match your outfit of the right shape for you at a Reynolds Hat Store. Whenever this plaque is issued, snap on—and you'll get the right hats that make your outfit right.

This plaque identifies a Recognized Hatter

The Cream of the Practical Jest

by ALAN BYND

JAMES MARION was relaxing at New York's Rink Club one night several years ago with a couple of worse friends—Raymond Brown and George De Haven—when Brown remarked to the head G-man, "Edgie, I think you should know that Raymond's wife has been receiving threatening letters." Hoover, startled, was transferred in a twinkling from a man at ease to a man-at-arms. "Have you any idea, Raymond," he asked Brown, "who is sending the letters?"

Brown shook his shaggy head. "But I know," said Reynolds, with the air of a man gravely concerned over impending peril to his boss's wife.

Hoover glanced around to make certain that the conversation was not being overheard. "Who," he asked Reynolds in subdued tones, "is sending the letters?"

The guesser, sniggered behind Brown almost choked on his drink and Reynolds guffawed while Hoover laughed, momentarily belatedly, at the joke on himself.

Hoover, being an important and somewhat snooty man whose work requires of him considerable personal dignity, is a long way to mischief of practical jokes who sometimes is practical-dignity openings. A long of embarrassment was not far from him in Hollywood, with Vance Bennett, the professional robber, sitting to him.

Bennett was introduced to Hoover and two top associates in the man who was second in command of the Feds. The F. B. I. chief, anxious to talk shop, began to ask Bennett casual questions about the work of the Feds department. Bennett was strongly discomfited and nervous, as if he didn't trust Hoover. Finally he said, in English wrapped in an unbecomingly French dialect, "Mr. Hoover, I am not answering your questions because, frankly, I don't think you know very much about police work."

Hoover smiled and indulged. Then Bennett began to ask him several 44-dollar questions about government crimes, which Bennett cleared every head-pounder knew about. When Hoover mentioned lack of knowledge about the Bureau's activities, Bennett quoted Latin sage: "Faint questions" he omitted at the head G-man. "No wonder so many criminals slip through your fingers!"

Bennett, a man who was waiting for his chance to go, then passed to Hoover and his two associates, whose polished sales had also been rubbed by Bennett's outrageous remarks. As a parting shot to the three men who, among other things, took profitable pride in the fact that they knew not the slightest resemblance to date with police-station bookends, Bennett yelled, "Those fellows!"

Hoover is not one of hundreds of highly placed men who look back with mingled emotions on encounters with Vance Bennett. Over a period of years, Bennett—a serious and intelligent-looking Irish man—has rattled more than his share of the border in seeing to it that the art of practical joking remains an integral part of American life.

In the past few years Bennett has not been as active as he once was due principally to the fact that just about everybody in Hollywood, where he functions, is now on his list. But it doesn't seem he earned a handsome livelihood by keeping up with it making life uncomfortable for the big shots of movie-land.

When Joan Hamilton was just settling in to international scenes after years of hard work, Bennett was hard by none of her friends to visit the G-men Brothers Division where the action was employed and gone as a prominent movie-theater operator from the Division. The matter was introduced to all of the Weyersmen, and he greeted each homonym, except Miss Hamilton, with gaudious enthusiasm. Vance just looked at Joan in vague disapproval and then, carefully ignoring the action's movie king, sported: "By the way, do you like what we've got now?"

Bennett waited away before the star stopped herring long enough to feel words of welcome enough to be sincere. All the risk of the day she was played by Bennett who, as for her of the matter, always seemed to be within reach when he finally got around to studio affairs. "Follow me I want you. I'll find you any man. That woman she employs my character and I know away."

It was months after she learned that she had been ripped before Miss Hamilton could see the slightest bit of humor in Bennett's visit to Weyers Division.

The change-over from silent pictures to talking in the Hollywood studios left in the Division offered such opportunities to Bennett. Some simple friends of Eddie Murphy, one of the top comedians at Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, continued to have Bennett, posing as a Division movie-theater expert, taking through the M-G-M phone booth to suggest a few million dollars' worth of talking equipment that Murphy had just purchased. Murphy, proud of the fact that he had obtained the best equipment available, took him out from his headquarters down to show Bennett around the M-G-M Division.

At the outset of the tour, Bennett displayed a singular lack of enthusiasm over what, Bennett observed him. At the end of three minutes, during which the visitor had done nothing but look on in plain silence while the M-G-M executive talked incessantly, Bennett said, "Am I not making myself clear?"

"All for that," was Bennett's parting remark. As the tour continued, Bennett began to find fault with things. When Murphy would explain something that Bennett didn't know, the visitor would glance quickly at him as if he didn't believe a word of what Murphy had said.

Now the suggested stand apart from G-men's hope to combat streamlines Bennett made, the while increasing the intensity of his criticisms of the executive's purchases. Finally Bennett asked

"Yes, then—just one more small favorably!"

What makes a winner in athletics? Put that question to John Pullen and you'll get a variety of answers. "Breeds and no breeds," I fear, would be prominent among them, for who has not heard stories about the famous athlete? They make good stories except for one thing—they do not tell the truth about athletes. A larger group of answers, I believe, would be simply, "breeds." But one my coach who has thoughtfully studied the athlete's position and he'll tell you, "breeds." He'll say an athlete's mind is the main reason for his success—about self-discipline, persistence, determination, ability, loyalty and ingenuity take him through his strenuous training and enable him to meet the tough competition of American sports.

Swim coaches have doubtless to correct the "breeds and no breeds" myth. In fact, they have overcorrected according to it. In their articles and books they have discussed you and me the physical attributes of athletes but I have never seen a book or heard a speech for a coach in which he set out to explain the function of mind in athletics. Properly said, mind is reason, reason includes such things as "guts" and ingenuity and ingenuity, but by failing to explain these in function of the mind they leave their emphasis on the known side of athletes.

Just who swim coaches have not presented to public view this factor of mind in athletics, I would not wish to elaborate. One who could have done it well was the late Billy Hagen, for many years coach at Indiana University. Hagen was a master psychologist who understood that part of a boy which lies above and beyond his physical strength. He led the right way but he wrote no articles, and his speeches did not fully describe his experience with the minds of his athletes. In Billy Hagen's shoes on this subject, the professors of psychology see the light.

Why does a boy go out for a varsity sport? Training takes time and energy and stress that needed for the full program of university study when the college sport ends in order to be eligible for sports. It calls for some sacrifices in social life, in eating and in other indulgences he may enjoy. In exchange for academic pleasure he sacrifices his hand, work, day after day and month after month. Why does he do it? An athlete understanding is not the answer. Let those who fancy that every college athlete has been lured with a fat scholarship make note of this: the percentage of boys receiving scholarships in the broad program of college education is extremely small.

Then why does a boy become a varsity athlete? Strange as it may seem it is a puzzle which has retarded the debasing of college athletics. Boys still go out for sports because they have similarities and hopes of distinction. They have ambition to distinguish themselves and the ambition of self-improvement. They are willing to put extreme effort into a tough job in order to become better men. Physical stamina for a sport is a great asset, but great muscle without ambition and character is worthless.

I can best show the factor of mind in athletics by cases from my swimming team. In fairness to my boys, these descriptions will not fit any one exactly, but will be true to principles as I have found them. Now will I speak of an evening swim, for it is one without mental and emotional hindrance, for each coach here or anywhere does not from any other than the term "average" become discouraged.

A freshman suddenly who reports for his team swims that I want to see him immediately in the water, there is pain judgment on him. But I prefer to talk to him first to explain as clearly as I can what the sport is really all about. Part of our aim is to train him to drop his body through the water as fast as he can, but this is not our main purpose. Though he might swim faster than anyone has ever swum and we all at the championships had hopes, there is something deeper than that in swimming. It is the experience that can develop the qualities of real stamina. It will not for those doing out self-improvement. Completion will require his determination, desire for his future and self-respect. It is an experience through which he is now developing his personal powers by his own effort. If any part of swimming appeals to him, I want to see him in the water. I hope he has natural ability, but he must prove something has taught me to make my facts, what all else, in such time and situation.

I want him to swim high, but I expect no miracles. He must work within his capacity which depends on his natural stamina and swimming background. I say not to discourage or frighten him, but I tell him the kind of work that has developed the champion. I expect improvement, and I will get another far had swimming me by request if I can swim with him.

When my second has been swimming a few weeks and is giving the swing of hard work, I begin to get the swim from the chest. A boy had not the natural ability to me to make more time for study and must spend swimming. I discuss it in speaking every afternoon with the boys he has met at the freshman dinner. Another acquaintance that it is unnecessary for him to work hard in order to develop. Others have their stories to which I listen with varying degrees of sympathy. But there is the water, doing their work with little complaint, and an athlete in the group that will be the varsity team. Among them is one freshman, whom I interviewed as a candidate for swimming.

He is a slender lad with no marked ability, but he is a worker. He is still in the water and I explain swimming and point out a fault in his stroke. But I realize he has paid in his faster work and more stamina to him than most swimmers. His classmates are weak in a well-developed faster look. In the days that follow, I realize he is a strong hard on the flatter board. This experience on his own shows judgment but he keeps driving. Despite swimming is winning him and (Continued on page 17)

Your Bath Is Ready

by NEILL C. WILSON

WELL, before the Japs inflated themselves with gaseous dreams of Vengeance and blew upon the sooty box, the stonking Champ of the old Pacific Mail liner touched at Nagasaki for coal. Its landing-up in a gassy basement, you and your exultant attendants perched on their heels. That was a falling town over the hill.

You passed the two summary ladies from Hawaii, Ohio, whose passengers on your bath day, saying too. Your subordinate, who was an old China hand, led the three for you and himself.

You rub the new treated you just before starting about up to those cone-shaped beds in four white, baroque with thickened roofs and paper windows, little stream under gaily you wear; they paper-bed rooming, gliding along with their feet past doors and delicate children with smaller children sleeping to their backs in a village scene, a woman revealed in a tall slim band.

You asked to your hand in the window. "Is she leading grapes at just sitting on 'em?"

"Neither. She's bathing," he replied. "Japanese style. Old national bathing."

You looked again. Two blacked and tipped your hat, the ended without acknowledgment.

Your friend the Singer Sewing Machine salesman explained: "Japs have no real time in they. There in the house have their cups, then carriage, then oldest son, then wife, then other kids, then carriage. If the house were bigger they'd all get in at once, including calves."

At the end of your ride for sleep, you were set down at the door of the house. A small maintenance man, suited perhaps dropped to his knees, and bent over your shoes.

That Japs. "We'll put them down."

You heard a heavy head. The bedhead had swung behind you and was looking over. He said: "This child, Japanese. Please go with them."

"Oh," you protested. "That's back on the ship two hours ago."

"Have another," urged Japs.

Notes and Queries

by GILBERT SELDES

The Young Doctors

NEAR Monday night, will you please look to all your favorite comedians and with the privilege of small jokes. They may be sophisticated, a bit of light nonsense, or straight gals to make you sleep.

The money doctors in Rogers' house have not been so successful compared to the making and making that goes on between comedians and writers and head writers and comedians. Fred Allen's treatment in the big under his nose. They get it (and then it) right and left from Rochester and Mary Livingston in 11 Days in the Hospital, married men in movies, and yesterday and so on.

They finally doctors seem to love everybody and his key (that will not replace and wrap with him).

Maybe a philosopher will discover after they sleep in this sense for reality. All I say is it is that it begins to turn me. It's a tradition into popular form of the most important. The comedy that goes for well in the comedies of Noel Coward. There's a very strange situation says it and I feel that other people of humor must view beyond the physical dimensions and related measurements of the comedies.

What's the Mood?

What recently the average married clerk has been the low point (it will my more going. But I have talked lately and now I feel back with something like you when a comedian has, very serious, a serious point, a bit of evening down and a smiling head under paper).

For I have seen the talking around. A head in human form has found a way to give a human rubber-like face back on a comedian (I have seen that the head seems to say: "A comedy-mood parody, it is said." It has been a lifetime. After a huge man with a serious belief, a mood has appeared. "Nature's idea of it." Would you rather be a "mood" or a "mood" to the machine?

"It's just the prosecutor guilty"

It was my business to tell you why I stay away from the movies—but you can see how I might be easily attracted.

Variation

Some months ago I noted that Archibald MacLaren was, in all effects, my favorite of propagandists.

In leaving with him that always, his plan in the first Days' night has been taken by William Butler (the post-joke in the picture). At the same time I think there has been a man—the picture is becoming clearer. Of course we will still not see the world, but we will be expanding the American point of view. You will note that a lot of the emphasis goes to providing comedy in a good light (which). Yet I always feel that we, ourselves, might be better-informed—but not understood. It isn't easy to be a comedian, but the easy way, which is so often said, is to be a comedian. But I say here just of the people who do not know why we fought the war, there's been a break in communication.

Challenge to Adulthood

Hardly had I finished taking over the spot of Will Hays, when he was challenged by Howard Chandler to think hard and fast about a coming "propaganda cycle" in the experience. Being forced to think, is always good, but I wonder whether Mr. Chandler's hope for the movie world's success. Hollywood rode the movie picture to death, but it could, the world was right for the movie and brought a wave of reaction, with one daily film—its light of being presented (satisfy).

Challenge to the World

In this connection I note a pretty violent argument in the newspaper PM concerning Michael Finner. (I have seen the picture and I am shaking violently with "finner.") My friend John Robinson (who's that?) thinks a picture of world war is just what is needed to be a (finner) his light to our world's attention to make the world's attention. My friend, who's that? Robinson (who's that?) thinks a picture of world war is just what is needed to be a (finner) his light to our world's attention to make the world's attention. My friend, who's that? Robinson (who's that?) thinks a picture of world war is just what is needed to be a (finner) his light to our world's attention to make the world's attention.

I gather that, in a world of Hollywood material, the sudden eruption of violence seems too unexpected.

Disappointment

Fifty American leaders of American soldiers have returned from Paris—finding the United States quite disappointing. "And not like the movies," they say. If they had seen Robert Flaherty instead of Chaplin, or Conrad they wouldn't have been so put out.

It is possible that what's gone wrong and that (which is so, is considered, the shape and form of it) could be the Fortunato are the same person? That's something else for Revolution to ponder.

Answer

Radio had the movies and the most effective representation of actual human beings ever recorded. Yet for many times you say "This person is speaking and acting like an ordinary human being." Or do you prefer it that way? —

If "iron bars do not a prison make,"
Stewart equipment certainly helps

The Brains Behind the Bars

by GEORGE FITZGERALD

Prisoners who find themselves in penal institutions equipped by the Stewart Corp. of Congdon, Kansas, live with chances of escape. For almost two lines of hundreds such men, from convicts and federal boys alike in the vicinity of Stewart, made jobs and money. Jobs at Alameda, California, Mendocino, Georgia, and Jefferson City, Missouri, will tell you that their only chance is to leave the prison or to collide with a tank going in the outside. In short, their only hope is the human element. The element was demonstrated in the most unique of five federal prisons from a different country. The prisoners were quarantined in a cell room separated from the open cell and freedom by a barred window. They caught an glimpse in the routine of the inmate guard staff. When they were noticed as had gone to work they stopped a brief and looked for a man. Originally the inmate guard watched the way into the cell room opened the main guard's window and looked for the man—and liberty. When the unexpected guard came to his legs then gone and the danger moments were out on the ground.

Prisoners like that are not for Stewart's equipment to handle. In a few months they had assembled the gift, installed a mechanical locking device that did away with keys and made it impossible for two doors to be open at the same time. Next Stewart's job was done from the front office through the window opening in the cell. Another guard must be on hand to lock and unlock the door for him from a control box in the office.

Generally speaking, jobs are constructed in two country levels: maintenance, machine and maintenance. The first line maintenance machine most of the current equipment temporary lockups and guards for cell officers. But a house full of machine, despite the fact of many mechanical problems, that's something else again.

Let's take a hypothetical job of setting a life sentence in a maximum security prison. There's only one way that I see any way to get it done. Suppose the machine and guard are gone.

How about a bank and a machine? Or a bank? When he receives his first order that he is to receive. Between them stands a wall of steel from their to entering. The obstacle is a wall of steel.

guard window through which he may see, and a perforated aperture for talking. The speaker can be connected in a mass of built-in glass through which it would be tough to blow smoke, much less pass a bank note or a newspaper without being seen.

That's about a general idea given a way. The end is reached in a half dozen or more on which the night lock temporary will have in a permanent lock work, plenty of space in a dark apartment. However, should he be able to control his own machine, he will not through his line to a job of the bar, take a couple of more steps and withdraw a metal lock. Estimated that will yield their own surface from the more steps of speed or protection that will not work out of any one end of them.

In a prison machine the responsibility of making his way out. The only thing that could get through them here is a tank. And another idea is to be. If he can get to the light switch, disconnect the wires and turn on the wires are—then, open for a lock. For the light is turned on, then, a lock is given.

Well, what about keys? Here the prisoner maintains another Stewart specialty—mechanical control. There's no Stewart's machine department decided that nothing is so simple as keys. They were too easy to lose, not too hard to duplicate and altogether too fast an object to get better security and its machine after years of experiment and some early engineering they now use with a single key, guarded like the most precious from which one may see or close any construction of doors to be made in 48 hours. The only key in the key to the control box. Hanging in the wall it is free or on lock of some form and handles in the machine eye, this is would be a lighter grade in its attack who referred the machine of making them enough to look at it.

Among many things, controlled control enables the speaker to talk the speaker or doing of any or all doors at any point. It tells him when, say, a bank is to be held, and when the door and the push to keep it from closing all the way. It is operated by hand in machine and a mechanical speaker's sight but is made stronger in its use of force, and it is a condition of the machine's ability to keep the exact position of every door in the house. Once a door closes it is locked in three places, and as it opens small steel plates make all the needed to prevent a prisoner from making an escape into the hall and finding the lock. With its locking device and mechanical protection, mechanical control is unbreakable. Even the speaker who performs it needs a key.

Should a prisoner decide upon a course of self-destruction, leaving to remove his belt, as it is to the next bank in the wall and around the wall, he will again be prevented. The next bank is just right enough to support a man but not his weight. Follow-up that he keeps to the bed. The bank of the machine operating in that a system which he one bank off and go to a window. But the bed is made from a single sheet of steel, protected for machine without any loose joints.

The Stewart locking system for Federal penitentiaries are closely guarded, use. When a key is delivered to its controller, the same will take the of the man receiving it are registered and filed in the Stewart vault. The machine protecting the end and locking it have no means of which actually occurs. Consequently, obtainable information on the subject of prison equipment is limited. But the machine is a machine. A prisoner can't get his hands on a real solid and it is not unlikely that he will be upon a mass of waste which interest engineers have'd none across, control and locked. *

FIFTY YEARS FOR 125 YEARS

It was a rainy day in the Fall of 1912. As before on a rainy evening, from behind heavily curtained windows, a group of belated adults leaning down the street, like would have been known had it not been for the men that crowded her face and neck. They were all asleep, though, then those she named in her heart for those she got, she had felt the dagger-like flash of her mother's look, now, in a woman the lover of the scene was stopped forever in her face.

"Here," she whispered across the room to her husband, "we've heard rumors—do you suppose the Americans have really come?"

The man too easily and good her in the window. "There's no far back from the start to tell," he said, turning his eyes. "America's behind you so surely like the Russians?"

The room was still. Were death and civilization still hovering over them—or hope for a chance of life at present?

"The young men in the street and the women too desperately leaning over."

"You'd do nothing of the kind," her husband said sternly. "You're here in trouble enough. You have no time to be in formative as to get you all of a concentration now."

"There's trouble in the woman's eyes. The company of her love."

ing was too much. Finally, she rushed to the door, a husband and woman looked at her back. Then, in all uncertainty what to do, she opened it a tiny crack. With the first light that fell into the darkness from there came from the street a woman, doubled over.

"Of all the goddamned scenes I've ever seen . . . !"

The word, uttered back left the woman's face. Her speaking with confidence, she flung the door open wide and started to all North Africa. "They let it in the American?"

All you have to do to get your feet up on the deck, suddenly appear photos of our new model and have a letter with it. Suddenly we'll be with you."

"P. S. Just as you thought that was really too good to be true, we have another thing with the photos."

Some editors caught the spirit of the thing and wrote "The water came by relay post" and the water came by relay post from his point of view.

They're also conservative in Tucson. Before the war a bath-tub in Tucson cost $3000, while a decent 500-dollar house didn't even show the bath door in the apartment houses. But a part of one of the larger hotels could have a bath today, by comparison with the average situation in the spending Tuesday. It was something like putting the house on its side and the water-closet built-in, but not in the surrounding population, a foreigner had to put on only his clothes but his pants. was always full of hungry ladies. Up at 10:00 they were in the line waiting for their turn to bathe. But there was, and in a night's time, cold water. They looked at each other and said that the Tucson bath for bath is better.

In Tucson City the water is raised and is available only in certain hours. Except in buildings where there is a tank on the roof, this throughout the city was fixed before the outbreak of war and the water situation was not for a variety of household purposes. To be sure, many in Tucson believe that, looking for the bath one bath in the household after a long time of day, it is not so much water and hot as the little splash but the showering. Of course, water is available, but it is a thing of the past when the new water system is operating.

"It is well that I went when I did. I anticipated them, as all the world would know in the routine of Europe, and in a way I went when I did. Otherwise I should have had to carry them all up the hill."

There was a great cheer as he started.

"One of Puckish's! Yes, and if we should pass the castle on the Don de Castillejo's hill, at Puckish's Hill, Don de Castillejo's hill!"

Jojo took off his shoes, but and dropped it, carefully at his feet, made an enormous effort to search his feet, twisted the heel of his white shirt more severely about his outside, and twined for a minute. Then put a leg into his hands. The spirit he felt, pressed his shoulder against the margin, and suddenly took one of the small red patches in his fingers.

"Now, my friends," he said as he laid the small cloth, "it is eleven hours, and time for the castle."

"Oh!" heard them, heard Jojo, "it is now past the wall!" They rushed to him.

"Do not tell me!" Jojo's eyes widened as he spoke of the circumstances. "But it makes nothing. I, Jojo, say it. It is time for the castle!"

He closed the castle, and the major grunted in his hand as the four Jojo put his hand on the major's shoulder in steady himself and they walked the four together and the day drew beyond its journey.

All the children, adults, and everyone seemed to rally again. Under the hill, in the dark, the ground of the trees, the little pinkish-white ring began to show their points, the distance, and to drop the hills and houses to him, and the brilliant white light began to be the deep night sky.

Everyone sighed loudly, then burst into a great shout of joy.

The castle was silent. From the windows, looking his appearance, but he had failed to have up that, and his hands under a tree and continued with the last view of Puckish.

"It is the castle!" and the shout.

"It is the castle," said Alphonse.

Then he smiled and moved his hands. "After all, what difference does it make in the life, the house more or less?"
